

Put on a Pretty Face

From megabrands to major stars, everyone wants to work with makeup artist NINA PARK. Topping the list? Her muse and friend, actress LAURA HARRIER

photographed by PHIL POYNTER
styled by MELANIE HUYNH

BEAUTY BEAT
To accentuate eyes, trace lash lines with a white pencil. Try Chanel Stylo Yeux Waterproof 949 in White Graphique ($33; chanel.com). Giambattista Valli dress. Bulgari ear cuff.

BEAUTY BEAT
Bring a sun-kissed glow to a dewy complexion by mixing a cream bronzer below cheekbones. Try Chanel Soleil Tan Bronze ($50; chanel.com).
Nina Ricci dress.
Louis Vuitton earrings.

Laura Harrier's plump pout and full eyebrows give the actress an enviable edge in front of the camera. But she would argue her best beauty asset is Nina Park, her makeup artist. "Whenever she does my makeup, it doesn't look as if I have any on," explains Harrier. "It's like, 'I just woke up like this,' which, I'll make very clear, I did not."

Park, who studied fine arts in college, credits a background in painting for her restrained approach to layering products. "Back then I was using a variety of tones to create depth in a portrait," she says. "I have the same approach when it comes to makeup. I love simplicity—but with thought-out attention to detail and execution." Now an official Chanel makeup artist, Park has earned a reputation for subtly playing up young Hollywood's most striking features, from Zoë Kravitz's piercing feline stare to Brie Larson's extra-long lashes and bronzy glow.

"I think Nina understands that, at the end of the day, we all just want to look pretty," says Harrier. "She gives me the best version of my face, but I still look like myself."

It helps that Park takes the time to foster deep friendships with whoever sits in her chair. "I really care about the girls I work with," she says. "Because we spend so much time together, I've been fortunate enough to share in some of the incredible moments in their careers."

And soon Park will be seeing Harrier through another professional milestone: getting the star red-carpet-ready to promote her role in Ryan Murphy's new Netflix series, Hollywood, a drama centered on the film industry post-WWII. With the show's press tour around the corner, Park has been mining some of the era's most glamorous icons—think Eartha Kitt, Dorothy Dandridge, and Josephine Baker—for inspiration. And Harrier's game plan? "I'll just show up," she says with a laugh. "I trust Nina so much that I'll let her do what she wants." —ALISON SYRETT

BEAUTY BEAT
To ease into a bold lip color, try a tinted balm with a hint of sheen. We like Neutrogena Moisture Smooth Color Stick in Almond Nude ($8; neutrogena.com).
Bottega Veneta jacket.
Repossi ear cuff.
Statement Paris earring.
Hair: Nikki Nelms for Impaq Beauty. Makeup: Nina Park for Forward Artists. Manicure: Marieke Bouillette for Calliste. Production: Octopix.